

Mangosteen (Xango)

This is a fruit, native to Southeast Asia, which uniquely concentrates a group of nutrients called xanthones. There are 200 types of xanthones and the center, pulp and peel of the mangosteen fruit contain 43 xanthones which is a higher number than in any other known fruit or vegetable.

Xanthones have two special qualities. They are antioxidants. These are the molecules that bind harmful byproducts in our body. Antioxidants are very effective in slowing down the aging process and may be effective prevention against heart disease, high blood pressure, strokes, tinnitus and many other diseases.

Xanthones are also anti-inflammatory agents. They are similar to ibuprofen (Motrin) and aspirin, but without the direct pain relief. But they also do not have any known side-effects. They are, therefore, may be useful in controlling allergies, asthma, aphthous ulcers, ADHD, fibromyalgia, vertigo, headaches, acid reflux, celiac sprue, colitis, psoriasis and arthritis. There have been scientific studies to prove some of the benefits of xanthones, but there are also anecdotal evidence that this juice provides other pleasant relief from fatigue, muscle aches and more.

There is still much to learn about xanthones and mangosteen juice, and it will not be the answer for some people. But, if you have some chronic inflammatory condition or wish to use a concentrated source of antioxidants, give mangosteen a try.

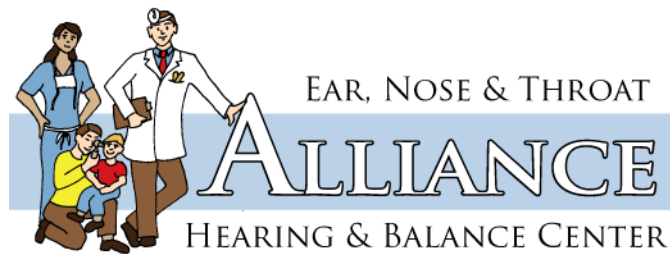

Xango is one mangosteen product that has developed a patented process for capturing these xanthones in a concentrated pure fruit juice. It is proven that antioxidants are more effective when ingested as a food rather than concentrated as a pill, such as vitamin C or E. It is estimated that 4 oz of Xango contains antioxidants equivalent to 5 cups of green tea.
